Meena and her family live in a village. One morning, Grandma was talking about their neighbour’s two daughters, Deepa and Mita. They had just returned from working in the city.

I hear they did not bring back much money.

I hear they haven’t even sent letters to their parents in these last two years.
Their father had taken Meena and Raju to the city once. Now the children wanted to hear Deepa and Mita’s experiences.

Mama, can we invite Deepa and Mita to our house?

All right, children.
A few days later, Deepa and Mita came for a visit. Meena was quite surprised to see them. The girls looked grown up and different. They also looked ill – not at all like the smart city girls that Meena had imagined.
At the mention of the city, the girls’ eyes filled with tears. Grandma and Mother felt very concerned. At first, they did not want to talk in front of Meena.

Meena is growing up. I think she should listen.
Then slowly, with a great deal of hesitation the girls began their story. Two years earlier their aunt’s friend had visited their house. Her brother was also with her...

I know families that need housemaids. Deepa and Mita can work in the city.

They can earn good money... they might even find husbands!
The aunt’s friend and her brother were very cunning.

If they are unhappy in town we will bring them back.

Don’t you trust us? Here, we will even give you one month’s salary in advance.
The girls’ parents were very poor and the offer seemed such a good one. They felt that their daughters might have a chance of a better life away from the village.
And so, Deepa and Mita left for the big city.

Goodbye, children. Take care.

Goodbye!
They arrived in the city after travelling for two days and constantly changing from buses to taxis. Here, the aunt’s friend sold the girls to another man.
Deepa and Mita were taken to a bad place where they were kept like prisoners. There were many other young girls there. Men paid money to touch them and feel them.
If the girls protested they were beaten. When the girls fell ill, there was no one to look after them or take them to a doctor. It was like being in hell.
Two years later, Deepa fell very ill. When she could not work anymore, she was thrown out on the street.
Luckily for Deepa, she found shelter in a home for women. They located Mita and rescued her too.
The people who helped Deepa also took her to a doctor who spoke to her for a long time. The doctor gave Deepa some terrible news.

What is wrong, Deepa?

Cough, cough!
Deepa was very sick and did not have many years to live. When she finished speaking, everyone was very sad for her.
Deepa and Mita had not told their parents what they had been through. They felt ashamed and scared.

"I am sure they will understand. I will talk to them."
Mother and Grandma also felt that it was important for others in the village to know, so that girls would not be taken to the city like this.

Mama, can’t these bad people be punished?
The next day Grandma spoke to Deepa and Mita’s parents, and that same evening a meeting was held at Meena’s home. Teacher was there and so was the health worker.

If girls need to work in town then parents should check out their workplaces.

Girls should also be provided with addresses of relatives.

You must share your story. People must realise the dangers of sending girls to town.
Younger girls should not be sent to work at all. They should stay in school!

They were soon joined by other villagers and even the village headman. Everyone discussed ways to protect the girls of the village.

We should get the police to check the background of people who offer jobs.

Younger girls should not be sent to work at all. They should stay in school!
A few days later, Meena was walking home from school.
Suddenly, she heard footsteps coming towards her. Two men were talking loudly. The men talked about taking four girls to town.
Meena tried to run away, but it was too late. The men heard her and grabbed her just as she hid behind some big leaves.
The wicked men tied Meena up and shut her in an abandoned hut amidst long grasses in the wilderness. People were afraid to go to this place. The men plotted to drug Meena and carry her in the bus, half asleep, with the other girls.
Poor Meena. She was really scared. She had never been in such danger before. How would she ever be saved?

Oh Mama, Father, what will happen to me?
Just then Meena heard a rustling and there was … Mithu!
Mithu pecked at the rope and untied Meena’s hands. Then Meena searched the room and piled everything she could find against the wall. She climbed up and painfully squeezed through the tiny window.
Meanwhile, the two men were spotted in the village market by Deepa and Mita’s parents.

Hey you! You are the man who took our daughters!

For two years we looked for them... We searched for you everywhere...
Soon an angry crowd gathered around the men. They tried to get away and run.

"You have caused us so much pain..."
Just then, Meena came rushing up. She was all scratched and bruised.

Stop them! Those men are planning to take more girls away today!
When the crowd heard Meena’s story, they became even angrier. They took the scoundrels straight to the police.
Late that evening, there was a lot of excitement in Meena’s house. Meena had become a heroine and the bad men were locked up in the police station!

From now on, if our daughters have to work, we will make sure that they go to safe places.

Meena, if I had been there, I would have caught those men!
The best thing of all was that Deepa and Mita were beginning to get their smiles back. They had even decided to form a group of young girls and boys to help others like them.
